These materials are mainly reused as fill materials in reclamation and earth filling works. Apart from some immediate reuse, surplus fill are delivered to and stockpiled at fill banks for subsequent reuse. To maintain the sustainability of our construction industry, surplus public fill must be timely and properly handled. Management of Marine Disposal of Dredged Sediment Although non-dredge methods are encouraged for Hong Kong reclamation projects, dredging is necessary for certain works related to the maintenance of harbours, fairways, anchorage or drainage channels. To comply with the environmental requirements, a framework has been established in Hong Kong for the management of dredged/excavated sediment disposal depending on the level of contamination of the sediment. Sediment disposal methods currently used in Hong Kong include the open sea disposal and the confined disposal at East Sha Chau. CEDD staff will introduce the management of public fill and marine disposal of dredged sediment in Hong Kong, and the operation of the fill banks and sediment disposal facilities to students at the schools.	Secondary 4 to 6 students	1 hour	School Talk	Upon request of school	Depend on the application circumstances
